Printing Industries of Michigan Chooses Constellation Energy as Endorsed Energy Supplier

BALTIMORE--(BUSINESS WIRE)-- Constellation Energy (NYSE: CEG), the nation's leading competitive electricity supplier to business and public sector customers, today announced that the Printing Industries of Michigan (PIM) has signed a three-year agreement choosing Constellation Energy as its endorsed energy supplier.

Constellation Energy will supply products and services including electricity and natural gas to member companies of PIM, a nonprofit trade association serving more than 150 commercial printing and graphic communications companies in Michigan. PIM is an affiliate of the Printing Industries of America, the world's largest graphic arts trade association with nearly 1 million employees.

"We are pleased to offer Michigan's commercial printing and graphics enterprises our customized energy management solutions to help them lower costs and improve profitability," said John Oroni, a vice president in Constellation's retail sales organization.

Nick Wagner, president of PIM, said, "PIM is pleased to team up with industry leader Constellation Energy to provide members with energy solutions through the PIM 'Buying Power' program. Our members can now manage their energy costs in new and powerful ways with the program's full range of integrated energy solutions."

About PIM:

Established in 1888, the Printing Industries of Michigan (PIM) is a nonprofit trade association serving more than 150 commercial printing and graphic communications companies throughout the state of Michigan. PIM members range from small family run businesses to large enterprises that provide products and services to print buyers and publishers. PIM makes resources available to help solve business problems, upgrade management techniques, improve employee communications, cut costs and increase profits. PIM works closely with Printing Industries of America (PIA), the umbrella organization for the graphic arts industry, to develop, enhance and supplement the programs and services needed to run a successful printing business.
