INVISIO's US office is fully operational

INVISIO, a world-leading technology company developing innovative communications systems with hearing protection, today announced that its newly established US subsidiary is up and running and that the organization is expanding with new employees.

INVISIO officially opened its US subsidiary in November 2016. INVISIO Communications Inc. is now completely operational and the organization is capable of efficiently targeting customers within security and defense throughout the United States. The key focus is to support existing customers, partners and programs, increasing the customer base and to maintain and expand business networks.

"We are excited to have opened a US base for INVISIO and expanding our operations there. Following our recent successful growth, a local US presence will give American customers closer support, and further back up our assignment to strengthen our role as leading supplier to customer groups within the defense and security industry" says Lars Højgård Hansen, CEO at INVISIO.

Ray Clarke will be heading the US Sales and Marketing team. He has extensive commercial sales experience, having run successful sales teams across the security and defense industry at Revision, MSA and Draeger, among others. On May 15-18, the US team will be present at 2017 SOFIC in Tampa, FL.

"I am excited to be joining INVISIO at this exciting time in the company's growth and to be leading the activities of the US team. SOFIC is the annual meeting point for the international Special Operations Forces community. We consider this exceptional event to be the ideal forum for connecting with business partners, potential customers and friends from the industry", says Ray Clarke, Director of National Sales in the US.
