U.S. Army Awards Booz Allen $78M Contract to Help Improve Operational Effectiveness

MCLEAN, Va.--(BUSINESS WIRE)-- The U.S. Army maintains an advantage against any threat in any environment by equipping soldiers with the world's best technologies and capabilities. To support the integration of Army resources, the Army awarded Booz Allen Hamilton (NYSE: BAH) a $78M contract in August of 2017 to support the System of Systems Engineering & Integration (SoSE&I) Directorate with a wide range of engineering, administrative and business services. The services will help the SoSE&I meet its mission of improving the operational effectiveness of the Army's capabilities across programs, systems and units.¹

"We're proud to expand our partnership with the Army to synchronize the technologies and capabilities that our troops rely on every day to protect the nation," said Michael Davenport, vice president at Booz Allen. "Our team's unique blend of engineering, technology and business management expertise, combined with our experience working within integrated teams, will help the Army apply solutions that achieve operational effectiveness. We look forward to working with the Army to ensure unified inter-service coordination, which is critical for attaining a full-spectrum force."

Booz Allen has supported the U.S. Army for more than 64 years, making it Booz Allen's second longest-standing client. For more information on Booz Allen Hamilton's Defense Business, click here.
