Outlook for the U.S. Economy and Real Estate Markets

Reception Following Presentation and Q&A

As we enter a new year full of uncertainty, it's a good time to review the outlook for the U.S. economy and real estate markets. Come hear from national expert Mark Fleming, Chief Economist at First American, who will share his perspective on 2016 and how we should be thinking about our homes, businesses and the nation's economy in the year ahead.

Mark Fleming
Chief Economist

First American

Mark leads an economics team responsible for analysis, commentary and forecasting trends in the real estate and mortgage markets. His research interests primarily include real estate and urban economics, applied econometrics and mortgage risk. As a trusted and influential voice with 20 years of experience in the mortgage and property information business, Mark is frequently quoted by national news outlets and industry trade publications such as The Wall Street Journal, The New York Times, and Housing Wire and he is a regular guest on high-profile broadcast news channels, including CBS, CNBC, Fox Business News and NPR.

Before joining First American, he developed insights and analytical products for CoreLogic, and property valuation models at Fannie Mae. Fleming graduated from the University of Maryland with a Master of Science and a doctorate in agricultural and resource economics and holds a Bachelor of Arts in economics from Swarthmore College. He lives and works in the Washington, D.C. area.
