Gladstone Land Reports No Damage to Farms from Wildfires in Southern California

MCLEAN, Va., Dec. 07, 2017 (GLOBE NEWSWIRE) -- Gladstone Land Corporation (NASDAQ:LAND) ("Gladstone Land" or the "Company") announced today that none of its farms or farm-related buildings in Southern California have been impacted by the wildfires that are currently spreading in that part of the state. The Company further announced that, due to the location of its farms, it does not expect any damage to its properties in the region as a result of the current wildfires.

"Although the community here in Ventura County is experiencing horrible losses from the Thomas Fire, our portfolio of farms in the area remains unscathed due to their location," said Bill Reiman, Managing Director of Gladstone Land. "Our farms in the area are all located in the farming plain that is far below the hills where the fire has raged out of control. We will continue to monitor the fire and support our community in its efforts to battle the blaze and support those in need."

"We remain fortunate once again to escape damage from the fires in Southern California," said David Gladstone, President and CEO of Gladstone Land. "Given the location of our farms and farm-related buildings and the current path of the fires, we believe the probability of any of the fires reaching our areas is extremely remote. As we have in the past, we stand ready to assist our farmers and others in the community should they need our help. We hope the fires will recede soon."
