Oclaro Showcases High-Speed Optical Networking Leadership During OFC/NFOEC 2011; Executives Presenting on Three Panels

SAN JOSE, Calif., March 4, 2011 /PRNewswire/ -- Oclaro, Inc. (Nasdaq: OCLR), a tier-one provider of optical communications and laser solutions, today announced that it will be previewing its latest high-speed optical network components and solutions at private customer suites (booth #2156 and 2160) during the OFC/NFOEC show in Los Angeles next week. As the market leader in high-speed optical networking, the company is the volume shipment leader in 40G DPSK line side 300-pin transponders. During OFC, Oclaro plans to announce its next generation 40G products with plans to extend leadership into the emerging 100G space.

"With the broadest portfolio of products targeted directly at the core optical network, Oclaro is committed to helping customers deliver the high performance, flexible, and cost-effective solutions demanded by telecommunications service providers," said Yves Le Maitre, Executive Vice President of Strategy and Corporate Development at Oclaro. "Whether a customer is looking for fast time-to-market through complete optical modules and sub-systems, or a family of discrete optical components to customize their own module designs, Oclaro has the innovative products, world-class manufacturing and scale to meet their needs."
