Dear Shareholders of Cracker Barrel:

Tomorrow we will report our results for the first quarter of our new fiscal year. In advance of that financial discussion, I want to update you directly on my thoughts about the Company two months after becoming CEO. Since we will not be addressing the proxy fight being waged by Sardar Biglari on tomorrow's investor call, I would also like to set the record straight on a few of the points he tried to make in his recent letter.

First, and perhaps most importantly – and contrary to Mr. Biglari's assertions – Cracker Barrel is one of the top performing family dining restaurant companies in America today, with a highly differentiated restaurant and retail experience. We have a powerful brand, a strong balance sheet, a successful business model, and loyal and enthusiastic customers. These core aspects of the company have resulted in Cracker Barrel shares outperforming both the S&P 500 index and a composite of our leading casual and family dining peers over the last five and ten years.¹

In his recent letter, Mr. Biglari misled you about our relative stock price performance when he compared Cracker Barrel against the "S&P Restaurant Index." He in fact used the S&P 500 Restaurant Index, which consists of only five large-cap restaurant companies (including McDonald's, Starbucks and YUM! Brands), all very different companies from us in size and focus. When we are compared to the S&P 600 Restaurant Index, which includes 16 smaller cap restaurant companies, including both Cracker Barrel and Biglari Holdings, our total shareholder returns (stock appreciation plus dividends) significantly outperform our peers over three, five, seven and ten year horizons. Our stock's long-term success relative to these legitimate peer benchmarks reflects our focus on long-term shareholder return and business success rather than short-term trading or financial engineering.

My highest priority upon becoming CEO was to leverage these strengths and drive improved performance in traffic, sales, profits, and shareholder value. I have high expectations for myself and for our management team, and expect to be judged by our performance.

As I outlined on our year-end fiscal 2011 earnings call, Cracker Barrel has implemented six key strategic initiatives for 2012 and beyond. These initiatives are specifically designed to capitalize on our brand franchise, accelerate improvements in our business model and maximize returns to you, our shareholders. I am pleased to report that during each month of the first fiscal quarter, we saw clear indications that our efforts are paying off with consecutive improvements in traffic as well as strong sales for the quarter. In addition, we have seen these trends continuing through the first three weeks of November.

Here is what we're currently seeing:

- New marketing messaging – our new ad campaign with our new advertising agency is in full swing and resonating with consumers.
- Refined menu and pricing – our new daily lunch specials at a $5.99 price point are driving traffic and ensuring customers the value they expect from Cracker Barrel.
- Enhanced restaurant operating platform – guest satisfaction continues to improve as we enhance speed of service while maintaining the special bond between our guest and our server.
- Innovative tactics driving retail sales growth – outstanding new retail items are fueling strong results as we continue to build on the strength of our brand.
- Focused cost reduction – initiatives to capture increased efficiencies in labor and transportation management are underway.
- Balanced approach to capital allocation – we continue to both reinvest in the business through prudent new store growth and increase return of capital to shareholders through our increased dividend and share repurchase programs.

What worries me is that our early success could be jeopardized by what I believe is Sardar Biglari's highly problematic attempt to get elected to our Board. He is the CEO of a restaurant acquisitions and holding company, Biglari Holdings, which has a history of making creeping acquisitions without paying target shareholders a control premium. He is also CEO of its principal portfolio company, Steak 'n Shake, a family dining restaurant chain that competes with Cracker Barrel.

Sardar Biglari's dealings with us to date as well as his previous actions as a new member of other boards lead us to believe that his election to Cracker Barrel's Board would result in the alienation of the Board and management team, negatively impacting the strategic efforts already underway and eroding shareholder value. Indeed, in my view, his recent 11-page manifesto of all-things-wrong with Cracker Barrel dating back to 2000 is both misdirected and misinformed.

Mr. Biglari says we shouldn't be building new stores and we're not getting a good return on our investment. Between our fiscal 2004 and 2009, we spent $382 million building 116 stores. For the fiscal year ending July 29, 2011, those stores generated earnings before interest, taxes, depreciation and amortization of $61.8 million¹. This represents a 16.2% return on our investment, which we believe is a good use of our capital.

Consider two additional examples of ideas Mr. Biglari has raised as "new," but which we have already thought about extensively. His focus on real estate is vague on how we should create shareholder value. We've examined various options to extract value from owned real estate, and ultimately concluded, when factoring in taxes and other transaction costs, that such alternatives produce minimal benefit relative to current bank and bond financing markets. Similarly, while the idea of international expansion for Cracker Barrel may sound exotically appealing, we have already thought through how our brand may resonate overseas and believe we have better risk-adjusted return opportunities here in the U.S. Our best opportunity for significant and profitable growth in the foreseeable future is to execute on the six strategic initiatives I have made “mission critical” for the near term.

Mr. Biglari is particularly critical of our negative trends in customer traffic. Clearly, we are focused on turning this around, and we are seeing results. However, what is critical for any restaurant company is the balance between traffic and price. Cracker Barrel is committed to profitable growth. As we improve our traffic going forward, we intend to maintain both the excellent value in our pricing and the quality associated with our brand. I believe our focus is on the right operating metrics over the long term.

In the face of challenging and uncertain economic times, we believe Cracker Barrel must capitalize on current opportunities while remaining focused on the longer-term success of the Company. The substantial changes in our senior management and Board of Directors underscore our commitment to this endeavor. We are always open to constructive feedback and new ideas – that’s why in August of this year we offered Mr. Biglari the opportunity to name two independent directors to the Cracker Barrel Board, an offer he refused. As your next generation of leadership, we are dedicated to successfully leading Cracker Barrel into a new era, leveraging our strong consumer brand and loyalty and delivering even greater value to shareholders.

I look forward to updating you in more detail on tomorrow’s first quarter earnings call. The live broadcast of the call will be available online in the News and Events section on the Company’s website at investor.crackerbarrel.com beginning at 11:00 a.m. (Eastern Time). An online replay will be available at 2:00 p.m. (Eastern Time) and continue through December 7, 2011.

You have an opportunity to endorse our new initiatives by voting for the Board’s nominees in connection with the annual shareholder meeting on December 20th. Your vote is important. We urge you to vote today the WHITE card FOR Cracker Barrel’s nominees, and ask that you NOT return any GOLD card sent to you by Mr. Biglari, even as a protest vote against his candidacy.

Sincerely,

Sandra B. Cochran
President and Chief Executive Officer
