Synalloy Announces Ownership Position in Universal Stainless

RICHMOND, Va., June 29, 2017 (GLOBE NEWSWIRE) -- Synalloy Corporation (Nasdaq:SYNL) ("Synalloy") has acquired a 3% ownership position in Universal Stainless & Alloy Products, Inc. (Nasdaq:USAP) ("Universal Stainless") and has presented the Universal Stainless Board of Directors with an initial proposal to merge the two companies. Craig Bram, President and CEO of Synalloy Corporation, said, "We believe that a combination of Synalloy and Universal Stainless offers immediate as well as future value to both shareholder groups. Product lines, distribution channels, end markets served and geographic proximity of manufacturing facilities provide opportunities for cost savings and new business development. Additionally, the elimination of duplicative corporate overhead and related public company costs is estimated at $3 million annually."

Bram shared, "In a normalized demand market, the combined company would have annual revenue and EBITDA of $475 million and $60 million, respectively. The balance sheet would be substantially larger, providing the resources to more aggressively pursue a growth by acquisition strategy. The market cap of the merged entity would easily place the company in the Russell 2000, providing the potential for additional share price appreciation and greater liquidity for shareholders. Ultimately, the Metals segment of the combined company could be a leading supplier of specialty steel products with an emphasis on stainless steel, nickel alloys and other premium alloy products, serving every major end market in the industrial economy."

The Universal Stainless Board of Directors responded to the Synalloy merger proposal by stating that pursuit of a business combination with Synalloy was not in the best interest of the company and its shareholders. The reasons given, in part, were as follows: 1) the exchange ratio proposed by Synalloy did not adequately recognize what the Universal Stainless Board believes to be Universal Stainless' disproportionately undervalued share price; 2) the existence and value of potential synergies between the two companies has been overstated; and 3) the use of a sale-leaseback in the transaction is unacceptable to the Universal Stainless Board of Directors. Bram said, "Synalloy is open to discussing the exchange ratio, but we are confident that the synergies that can be realized from a merger go well beyond the elimination of duplicative corporate overhead. As to the comments on the sale-leaseback, we believe there are more effective uses of capital than owning manufacturing real estate. Our proposal would have Universal Stainless shareholders receiving a cash payment equal to about 60% of the sale-leaseback proceeds, with the balance used to retire debt."

Bram further commented, "Synalloy and Universal Stainless have many of the same institutional shareholders. Based on public filings, approximately 24% of each company's shares is owned by the same institutional shareholders. In addition to Synalloy's 3% ownership, based on public filings, the four largest shareholders of Universal Stainless own 33% of Universal Stainless, but to our knowledge have no overlapping ownership with Synalloy."
