TheStreet Launches Retirement Daily with Veteran Financial Journalist Robert Powell

NEW YORK, April 25, 2018 /PRNewswire/ -- TheStreet.com, a leading financial news and information provider (a business unit of TheStreet, Inc., NASDAQ: TST), today announced the launch of Retirement Daily, a subscription-based service for those planning for and living in retirement.

TheStreet[®]

Edited by Robert Powell, one of the nation's foremost and trusted retirement experts, Retirement Daily covers the most relevant, retirement-related news and provides analysis of the latest investments, insurance products and research studies.

"Americans of all ages are concerned about their retirement. With so many changes in tax laws, estate planning, insurance and financial regulations, we wanted to create a no-nonsense resource to provide trusted, valuable retirement information," said Margaret de Luna, President of TheStreet.com. "Bob and his team bring an expertise unparalleled in the industry."

Retirement Daily will help readers save and invest safely in the most tax-efficient manner possible, inform critical decisions around 401(k)s, IRAs, Social Security, Medicare and healthcare and assess readiness to retire. Interactive features include financial calculators, on-demand podcasts and webinars, how-to guides, money makeovers and "Ask Bob," a lively forum where Powell and the nation's experts answer reader questions.

"Retirement Daily gives my colleagues at TheStreet and me a one-of-a-kind opportunity to help those saving for and living in retirement achieve their goals," said Robert Powell. "It's our goal to help readers make sound financial decisions no matter what's happening, on Wall Street or Main Street, and to do so in the most trustworthy manner possible."

The launch of Retirement Daily underscores a strategic shift toward more subscription products from TheStreet to complement its existing stable of newsletters and investing services, including Jim Cramer's popular Action Alerts PLUS.
